For example: if (typeof(func) == 'function') { //... } I would like to write the same thing using js. I know that there is no generics in JavaScript but I can't find in my head how to do it. A: There is no such thing as a generic in JavaScript, but the closest would be a const which prevents an unexpected value to be used as a reference (or to be used with the + operator). You can do something like this using Object.prototype.isPrototypeOf: var Function = function ( ) { }; Object.prototype.isFunction = function () { return this.prototype.isPrototypeOf(Function); }; This can be used like this: if (Function.isFunction(func)) { //... } Or using Object.prototype.toString to check if it's a Function: if(typeof(func) === 'function') { //... } On Tuesday, Jeb Bush released a list of 13,000 people from around the country who reached out to ask for support in his Super PAC, Right to Rise, but he's got a hard time wrapping his brain around the fact that there are more than 13,000 people who want to be heard. "As governor,

A randomized double blind study comparing the efficacy of ondansetron/premedication with metoclopramide, ondansetron/premedication with droperidol/scopolamine, ondansetron alone, and with placebo to prevent postoperative nausea and vomiting in children and adolescents undergoing day-case plastic surgery. The purpose of this prospective, double-blind, randomized, controlled study was to determine if children and adolescents undergoing day-case plastic surgery using a caudal epidural/patient-controlled analgesia (PCA) technique would benefit from the addition of ondansetron/premedication with metoclopramide, ondansetron/premedication with droperidol/scopolamine, ondansetron alone, or placebo. Seventy-six children and adolescents, aged 2 to 17 years and ASA class I-II, were randomized to 1 of 4 premedication/postoperative nausea/vomiting (PONV) protocols: Group 1: ondansetron 4 mg orally and droperidol 3 mg and scopolamine 0.015 mg/kg intravenously (n = 24); Group 2: ondansetron 4 mg orally and metoclopramide 1 mg/kg intravenously (n = 24); Group 3: ondansetron alone 4 mg orally (n = 24); and Group 4: placebo (n = 16). Premedication was administered 15 minutes before induction of anesthesia. Postoperative nausea/vomiting was scored using a 4-point verbal rating scale. Intravenous narcotic consumption was recorded. There were no differences in demographics or operative data between the 4 study groups. There was no difference in PONV between Group 1 and Group 2. Compared with Group 3, Group 4 experienced a higher rate of PONV (p = 0.04). Compared with Group 1, Group 2 experienced a higher rate of PONV (p = 0.02). Children receiving ondansetron and metoclopramide experienced a lower rate of nausea (p = 0.02) and PONV (p = 0.001) compared with children receiving ondansetron alone. Children receiving ondansetron and metoclopramide experienced a lower median intravenous narcotic consumption than those receiving ondansetron and droperidol (p = 0.003). Using a caud
